5. [redacted] Having been advised by [redacted] that Chester Furlong, Air Force Space Systems Command, would be visiting with James Gehrig, Staff Director of the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee, and might be touching on matters at the [redacted] I alerted Gehrig that although Furlong had [redacted] neither Colonel James McGarry nor Colonel Don Floyd, who were accompanying him, had this clearance. Gehrig said he didn't anticipate that the conversation would get into these levels but appreciated us giving him this alert. He was under the impression that Floyd had clearances.

6. [redacted] Talked to Mr. William Fisher, International Division, BOB, and was advised that the Bureau clearance letter relating to the Agency legislative package is still tied up in their Legislative Reference Office. Mr. Fisher stated he was advised that final determination on the letter will be made tomorrow afternoon, at which time he will call me.

7. [redacted] I was unable to see Miss Elizabeth Strannigan, Personal Secretary to Senator Gale McGee, during the afternoon as she was tied up with the Senator. I made an open appointment to meet with her during the morning tomorrow. This is by way of follow-up of the Director's invitation to Senator McGee to visit the Agency for breakfast and briefing, originally extended last fall. The Senator's time has been completely committed due to a combination of speaking engagements away from the city and a desire to spend as much time with his young family when he is in the city.

8. [redacted] Boyd Crawford called to inquire if the Director could brief the full House Foreign Affairs Committee on the morning of 21 February at 10 a.m. He indicated the Chairman had no particular thoughts as to content. He pointed out that McNamara and Wheeler had been there in the last few days and each gave a short opening statement of five or ten minutes and then responded to questions. I indicated we could give about half an hour presentation on the military and overall threat posed by the Soviet Union and Communist China. Mr. Crawford thought this would be excellent but stated he would discuss it further with the Chairman.
